

Not For Bookworms Only

Whether for browsing, research, or last minute cramming, students frequently take advantage of the services provided by the library.

The great variety and availability of materials in Collier Library attract not only the intellectuals on campus, but students of a less intellectual nature as well. Open stacks provide students with easy access to approximately 940 periodicals which not only cover the academics but also include journals such as Ebony, Billboard, and Dance Magazine to supplement students' interests. Students often use free time to browse through an assortment of 25 newspapers.

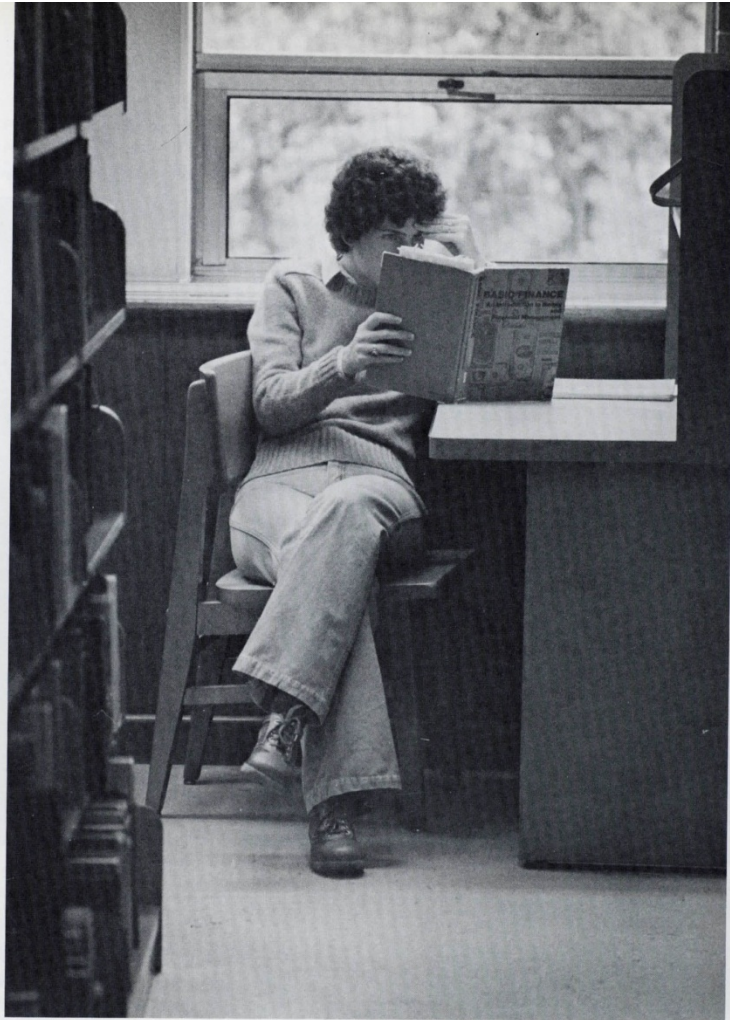

In an effort to provide adequate coverage for all areas of study, the library has expanded its resources to include those for new major and graduate programs. Last year alone the library added 6,830 new volumes to its collection. To provide greater convenience and service to students, the library remains open 84¼ hours a week and has added a second reference librarian to its staff which includes 35 student workers.

Technical Assistant Nelda Clement sorts the day's mail in the periodical department.

Undisturbed by the outside world, Cathy Marxer finds a secluded study carrel to be the perfect place to absorb some basic finance.

The newest member of the library staff, Glenda Griggs, checks records in the circulation department. Ms. Griggs became Collier's Circulation Librarian early in November.

In the acquisitions department, Anne Fulmer verifies bibliographical information on the microfiche reader. Anne is one of 35 students employed by the library.
