3-6-12
The history program is designed to serve students who wish to prepare for graduate study in history, for teaching history in grades 6-12 (a second major in education is required for teacher certification), for entry into professional schools such as law, library science, journalism, seminary training, and for careers in business, educational institutions, and other areas which require a broad general education.

Students with a minimum score of 28 on the ACT Reading subtest or a minimum score of 630 on the SAT Reading Comprehension subtest or with special approval from the department may choose to enroll in honors history courses.

The political science program is designed to serve students who wish to prepare for graduate study leading toward careers requiring advanced study in government, politics, or policy and to prepare students for careers in federal, state, and local government, including municipal and private planning agencies. A program in political science is also appropriate for preprofessional preparation for law.

The social science program is designed to serve students who wish to prepare for teaching social sciences in grades 6-12 (a second major in education is required for teacher certification).

Students with majors in history, political science, or social science are required to successfully complete exit examinations prior to graduation.

EN 334: Language and Gender

Course Description: This course examines the nature and function of sex differences in written and spoken language on a cross-cultural basis. While the emphasis is on spoken and written language, some attention is also paid to differences in nonverbal communication. The contrasts between stereotypes about how women and men communicate and the actually occurring patterns are carefully examined. The significance of different communication patterns is considered in connection with theoretical models drawn from sociolinguistics, anthropology, and psychology.

Course Textbooks and Supplies:

Course Packet on Angel. A collection of 15 cross-cultural research articles examining gender specific discourse.

Methods of Evaluation: Grades in this course will be based on the following measures:

- 25% for The Dialogic Log
- 25% for The Discourse Analysis Paper
- 25% for The Final Paper/Presentation
- 25% for The Final Exam

- Students are expected to actively participate in all class activities. This means fully cooperating with other students, thoroughly completing class assignments, and regularly speaking during discussions.

- Failure to turn in one or more of the graded assignments during the semester will result in an automatic failing grade for the course, regardless of the grades earned on the work which was completed and turned in on time.

Academic Honesty and Plagiarism: Academic honesty is discussed in the 2012-2013 Catalog. Guidelines on avoiding plagiarism can be found at http://www2.una.edu/library/plagiarismstudentguide.htm. Additional information and links to more sites on plagiarism are included on the English Department’s web page, http://www2.una.edu/english/penalties_for_plagiarism_at_una.htm. Penalties for plagiarism at UNA may range from a failing grade for a specific assignment to a failing grade in the course to suspension from the University (in repeat cases).

Attendance Policy: Class attendance is required since coming to class is the only way students can successfully complete the course. Regular attendance and being on time are indications of your taking the work of the course seriously. Excused absences will only be permitted in exceptional circumstances, such as medical problems or family crisis, and written proof of the circumstances may be required.

Course Description: This class explores some of the 400 years of rich writings and accounts of America’s tradition of protest and dissent, and uses these as examples to guide and inspire the student writing of protest literature.

Course Aims and Methods: English 435W is a course designed to provide an environment in which intermediate and advanced writers can work on furthering their understanding of the craft of writing protest literature. The course will focus on two areas: reading protest literature from different periods in history, and on the student production of original materials to be critiqued in workshop. Because reading is an important part of the maturation process of a writer, we will spend significant portions of time doing close readings of protest literature. Students will be responsible for leading discussions on writers and their work. These discussions will involve elements of craft such as technique, style, voice, content, as well as other relevant concerns/issues. Each student will also be given the opportunity to workshop several poems and a nonfiction essay. All the readings will be springboards to writing; we’ll do in-class and homework exercises, plus several longer pieces. All of your writing will constitute a portfolio that you will build through the semester.

Course Goals: Through lively and spirited discussions of assigned material, students will begin forming independent and concrete opinions about the style and direction of their creative projects. More specifically, students will see their writing evolve, their ability to critique writing enhanced, and their general grasp and control of writing strengthened.

Required Textbooks:
American Protest Literature edited by Zoe Trodd,
One Small Three Ring Binder
In addition to these, you might be required to make copies of other materials on hold in the library.

Grading: Your final grade will be the average of the assignments based on the categories listed below. However, there are a number of other assignments that will comprise at least fifty percent of your grade. Class participation will also be considered in your final grade.

Writing Assignments (Includes essays, poems, and other forms)
Online Exercises (Assignments posted on Angel, and turned in on Angel)
Discussion Leader
Workshop Leader
Peer Critiques
Final Portfolio

Course Requirements:
A minimum of forty pages of original material will be produced during the semester, which will be comprised of the following:
-This will consist of poems, essays, responses, and other work.
- You will also be required to submit work to Lights & Shadows

*Each final draft of essays should be a minimum of five (5) pages. Poems will vary in length.

*All work used for the completion of requirements in this course is to be original and new, meaning previously written material is not to be used for workshop or to be included in the final portfolio.

Critiques: For each student piece that is workshoped, you will do a response/critique to the piece. For fiction and nonfiction pieces, a one to two-page typed critique of the story will be expected. This should include (but is not limited to) a quick summary of what happens in the story, a discussion of relevant elements, and your general response to the story, which can include comments on the strong aspects, and any suggestions you may have for the author during the revision process. For poetry, you will be allowed to limit your response to the paper itself and/or an attached typed response. Critiques will not be counted toward your final portfolio page count.

Will this proposal result in the need for a Revised Faculty Roster Form? Yes ☑ No ☐
If yes, for whom: Daryl Brown

Brief Description and Rationale (based on assessment) for Proposed Change (proposals must be accompanied by a copy of the current catalog page(s) with all suggested changes made using the Guidelines and Style Manual):

EN 535W Writing Protest and Dissent (3). Explores some of the 400 years of rich writings and accounts of America’s tradition of protest and dissent, and uses these as examples to guide and inspire the student writing of protest literature. (Offered on sufficient Demand)

Course Aims and Methods: English 535W is a course designed to provide an environment in which intermediate and advanced writers can work on furthering their understanding of the craft of writing protest literature. The course will focus on two areas: reading protest literature from different periods in history, and on the student production of original materials to be critiqued in workshop.

Rationale: The course further diversifies the offerings by the English Department, which will attract additional students.

The proposed change(s) will be effective beginning: Spring semester 2014 year

Title of Course  Writing Protest and Dissent  Credit 3

1. Course catalog description and objectives.
   Explores some of the 400 years of rich writings and accounts of America’s tradition of protest/dissent, and uses these as examples to guide and inspire the student writing of protest literature. (Offered on sufficient demand)

2. Justification for course or proposed change(s)
   The course has made twice as a Special Topics course. Clearly, there is sufficient demand to make it part of the regular offering. Additionally, the course further diversifies the class offerings for our graduate students, which makes our program more attractive to current and prospective students.

3. Outline of Course Topics
   The course will utilize American protest literature that ranges from the early days of America to the present day. The topics will also be varied.

4. Activities Required of Students
   Students will do classroom presentations of research done on reading materials, write protest literature in a number of genres, and produce written critiques of each other's creative writings.

5. Evaluation Procedures
   Students will be evaluated by assessing the following:
   - Writing Assignments (Includes essays, poems, and other forms)
   - Online Exercises (Assignments posted on Angel, and turned in on Angel)
   - Discussion Leader
   - Workshop Leader
   - Peer Critiques
   - Final Writing Portfolio

6. References and Text
   American Protest Literature edited by Zoe Trodd,

7. Course resources and costs

8. Justification for Addition of/Increase in Course Fee

9. Justification for Graduate Credit When a Course is Dual Listed
   Graduate students will be required to do longer writing assignments, and they will be required to submit a larger portfolio at the end of class. In addition, they will serve as discussion leader and workshop more often than undergraduate students.

Course Description: This class explores some of the 400 years of rich writings and accounts of America’s tradition of protest and dissent, and uses these as examples to guide and inspire the student writing of protest literature.

Course Aims and Methods: English 535W is a course designed to provide an environment in which intermediate and advanced writers can work on furthering their understanding of the craft of writing. The course will focus on two areas: reading nonfiction, and on the student production of original materials to be critiqued in workshop. Because reading is an important part of the maturation process of a writer, we will spend significant portions of time doing close readings of nonfiction pieces. Students will be responsible for leading discussions on writers and their work. These discussions will involve elements of craft such as technique, style, voice, content, as well as other relevant concerns. Each student will also be given the opportunity to workshop several poems, and a nonfiction piece. All the readings will be springboards to writing; and we will do both in-class and homework exercises, plus several longer pieces. All of your writing will constitute a portfolio that you will build through the semester.

Course Goals: Through lively and spirited discussions of assigned material, students will begin forming independent and concrete opinions about the style and direction of their creative projects. More specifically, students will see their writing evolve, their ability to critique writing enhanced, and their general grasp and control of writing strengthened.

Required Textbooks:
American Protest Literature edited by Zoe Trodd,
One Small Three Ring Binder
In addition to these, you might be required to make copies of other materials on hold in the library.

Grading: Your final grade will be the average of the assignments based on the categories listed below. However, there are a number of other assignments that will comprise at least fifty percent of your grade. Class participation will also be considered in your final grade.

Writing Assignments (Includes essays, poems, and other forms)
Online Exercises (Assignments posted on Angel, and turned in on Angel)
Discussion Leader
Workshop Leader
Peer Critiques
Final Portfolio

Course Requirements:
A minimum of fifty pages of original material will be produced during the semester, which will be comprised of the following:
- This will consist of poems, essays, responses, and other work.
- You will also be required to submit work to Lights & Shadows

*Each final draft of essays should be a minimum of eight (8) pages. Poems will vary in length.

*All work used for the completion of requirements in this course is to be original and new, meaning previously written material is not to be used for workshop or to be included in the final portfolio.

Critiques: For each student piece that is workshopped, you will do a response/critique to the piece. For fiction and nonfiction pieces, a one to two-page typed critique of the story will be expected. This should include (but is not limited to) a quick summary of what happens in the story, a discussion of relevant elements, and your general response to the story, which can include complements on the strong aspects, and any suggestions you may have for the author during the revision process. For poetry, you will be allowed to limit your response to the paper itself and/or an attached typed response. Critiques will not be counted toward your final portfolio page count.

List courses that will be added or deleted for EACH major affected by the curriculum change (see current Major’s Courses List). Include major, course number, and title (e.g., “Add to Biology and Marine Biology – BI 498 Study of Pelagic Birds.”)

Brief Description and Rationale – (1) include catalog course prefix, proposed number, credit hours, title, description, prerequisite, if any; (2) include relevant information concerning UNA’s mission and goals, student learning opportunities, impact on existing programs and financial implications (you must attach a copy of the current catalog page(s) with all suggested changes made using the Guidelines and Style Manual):

Following UNA’s development of interdisciplinary minors in the field of Human-Computer Interaction/User Experience (HCI/UX), the Department of Geography is proposing a Geospatial Human-Computer Interaction minor (also known as GEOHCI). GeoHCI is an emerging concept which integrates location-based knowledge, spatial cognition and fundamental aspects of geographic representation into the computer-human interaction domain. The need for geospatial information in the marketplace is growing rapidly, and so is the increase in organizations that utilize location-based information. This minor in GEOHCI will produce broadly trained geographers with knowledge from other related disciplines that incorporate development, design and use-experience aspects. These include: Art, Computer Information Systems, English, and Psychology. This interdisciplinary minor will broaden students’ perspectives and also enhance their employment chances in the job market.

GE487 - Geography Capstone Project is being used temporarily until such a time when the UNA HCI/UX program establishes a common capstone course for all HCI/UX minors on UNA campus.
